Have you got the answers to 'Get into Games'?

Ten questions to ask when selecting a course in professional game development:

1. Will I learn from industry experts?
2. Is the course located near major games studios?
3. Will I make lifelong industry connections?
4. Will I gain skills for multiple industry pathways?
5. Will I build on or build to a degree?
6. Will I complete all my coursework in class?
7. Will I get access to current software?
8. Will I be able to demonstrate my unique talents and team working skills to a studio?
9. Do the costs and benefits compare with teaching myself?
10. Have I compared all my options and received lots of advice?

Graduate Civil Engineer

$40K-$50K

This client requires a Site Engineer who wishes to kick start their career with one of the fastest growing companies in the Australian civil construction industry. From pipelines to subdivisions, earthworks to major roads projects, this multi-disciplined contractor builds it, so no matter what your particular bent is, you will be able to pursue it with this dynamic outfit. Degree-qualified civil engineering graduates will be considered, especially if you have experience with a contractor.

You will be assisting Project Engineers/Project Managers, providing engineering support on site, setting up and coordinating jobs, dealing with contractual issues, keeping sub-contractors honest, managing direct and indirect labour, ordering materials and dealing with all the usual OH&S and QA issues.

Excellent salary packages are on offer as a reflection of the competition for top talent in this industry - if you've got the right skills, the right attitude, and can communicate assertively, you will be well-rewarded at this company.
